
In Figure 2, the client is the customer, and the server is the financial institution. The client provides their identification information, which is then verified by the server. This process ensures that the client is who they claim to be and that their information is accurate. The server then uses this information to provide the client with the requested financial services. The process is secure and protected, ensuring the privacy and safety of the client's personal information.